

2020-2022 S. 57 under the Labour Relations Act

How long is the strike?

Answer: 30 days

1. What is the maximum duration of a strike under the Act?

The Act provides that the maximum duration of a strike is 30 days. This period is calculated from the date on which the strike begins. If the strike is extended beyond the 30-day period, the provisions of the Act concerning the suspension of the strike will apply. In 2020, 250 strikes were recorded, with a total of 750 days of strike action.

The Act also provides that the maximum duration of a strike is 30 days. This period is calculated from the date on which the strike begins. If the strike is extended beyond the 30-day period, the provisions of the Act concerning the suspension of the strike will apply. In 2021, 17 strikes were recorded, with a total of 500 days of strike action.

The Act also provides that the maximum duration of a strike is 30 days. This period is calculated from the date on which the strike begins. If the strike is extended beyond the 30-day period, the provisions of the Act concerning the suspension of the strike will apply. In 2022, 3000 strikes were recorded, with a total of 750 days of strike action.

2. What is the maximum duration of a strike under the Act?

The Act provides that the maximum duration of a strike is 30 days. This period is calculated from the date on which the strike begins. If the strike is extended beyond the 30-day period, the provisions of the Act concerning the suspension of the strike will apply. In 2021, 17 strikes were recorded, with a total of 500 days of strike action.

3. What is the maximum duration of a strike under the Act?

The Act provides that the maximum duration of a strike is 30 days. This period is calculated from the date on which the strike begins. If the strike is extended beyond the 30-day period, the provisions of the Act concerning the suspension of the strike will apply. In 2022, 3000 strikes were recorded, with a total of 750 days of strike action.

